Mones says...

As I write, we are just waking up in the village of Kiryat Ye'arim. It is about 720 meters above sea level, sitting on top of one of the hills on the mountainous road between Jerusalem and Tel Aviv.

This village has been identified as the town of Kiryat Ye'arim, 'the village of the woods', and it is the place where the Ark of the Covenant was left with Obed Edom the Gittite. The Ark was left with Obed for 20 years and it said that its presence has blessed Obed and all that he had.

The choir and our pilgrims group have been here for two nights after coming down from Galilee. On the way to Jerusalem we stopped at the traditional site of Baptism, not far from Jericho and Qumran, where five of our members were baptised, or renewed their baptismal vows, by full immersion and the rest by sprinkling of water and the sign of the cross on their foreheads, a glorious experience and witness to so many onlookers especially as we sung 'Guide me O thou Great Redeemer', twice!

But let me go back to share with you about the presence of God. David was desperate to have God's presence at the heart of his city, and was willing to be extravagantly generous in the pursuit of the Ark and the Lord's presence, as he sought to bring it from Obed Edom's house where he left it the previous time. He did so with the utmost care but with even greater rejoicing and generosity. It is at the end of the biblical section in 2 Samuel 6 when the Ark has arrived in Jerusalem that we hear David saying "and I will be more undignified than this".

David's heart-felt worship says to me, as it has done for years, do not be worried about how others express their worship, stop judging the rightness of the expression of their worship, but instead focus on your heart and its response to God. It is so dangerous to judge the rightness of others' worship of Jehovah, whether it's right or dignified or , as this judgmental attitude seems to bring severe judgment on the one who judges. Go on read all about it in 2 Samuel 6 or in 1 Chronicles 13:5-8.
